“Ironshore is pleased to collaborate with CHADD during ADHD Awareness Month to help provide access to educational tools and resources for those families who struggle everyday with ADHD,” said David Lickrish, Chief Executive Officer of Ironshore Pharmaceuticals & Development, Inc. “The early morning routine, in particular, can pose a great challenge for patients with ADHD. We are committed to arming patients and their families with information so that they can talk with their doctor and discuss which behavioral strategies and treatment options will work best for them.”

“Each October, in partnership with the members of the ADHD Awareness Month Coalition, CHADD celebrates ADHD Awareness Month to help improve the lives of the 17 million children and adults in the United States who are living with ADHD,” said April Gower, Chief Operating Officer of CHADD. “We thank Ironshore for their support in helping us shed light on the challenges associated with ADHD, how it impacts the entire family unit and the importance of seeking an assessment and getting appropriate treatment.”

ADHD Awareness Month is supported by a coalition of national groups concerned about ADHD and mental health. The members of the ADHD Awareness Month Coalition include CHADD, ADHD Coaches Organization (ACO), and Attention Deficit Disorder Association (ADDA).

About ADHD & Morning Symptoms

ADHD is among the most common childhood psychiatric conditions with behavioral symptoms fluctuating throughout the day. It is usually first diagnosed in childhood and often lasts into adulthood. Children with ADHD may have trouble paying attention, controlling impulsive behaviors, or be overly active. Many home-based difficulties for children and adolescents with ADHD occur during the early morning routine (i.e. before the school day begins). Simple tasks like getting dressed, brushing teeth and eating breakfast can be a struggle. These disruptions can lead to being late for work or school and set a negative tone for the rest of the day.
